

Academy Awards: Homes inspired by movies up for academy awards

Movies invite us to enter imaginary worlds and become part of something outside our everyday experience. Oftentimes, all it takes to live the fantasy is to make a getaway to an unfamiliar place and stake our claim on a movie-inspired home away from home.

Whether you're yearning to lose yourself in a La La Land-inspired fantasy with a distinct 50s-60s vibe, a dreamy Manchester by the Sea-imbued ambience, or a cozy down-home Hell or High Water atmosphere, take a walk through these vacation homes inspired by 2017 Oscar-Nominated films.

Though not located in L.A., Belvedere in Manson, WA, will set the tone for your own dreamy fantasies of living large. The film, shot to emulate the Cinemascope of the 1950s, is visually rich and conjures up the desire in all of us to go big and make our dreams come true. Belvedere's strong mid-century modern elements in architecture and color pallet - grey and turquoise, with a bright lemon-yellow chair in the living room - this home is reminiscent of a time when modern jazz, prosperity, and hope were on the rise.

You won't have to follow the path of the Howard brothers in Hell or High Water to experience that down-home front porch feeling Texas is known for. The film (boasting nominations for Best Picture, Best Supporting Actor, Best Film Editing, and Best Original Screenplay) tells the story of how Toby and Tanner Howard set out to rob as many banks as needed to save the family ranch - all with a fair dose of aplomb - and is a testament to nonchalant Texas pride. All you'll need to do to experience the folksy, low-key lifestyle is come stay in this quaint Fredericksburg cabin, complete with wood plank walls, ceilings, and floors, and a covered front porch with cozy wicker furniture.
